Long ago in China, a tiny dragon named Mushu was assigned to protect a young woman named Mulan by her ancestors. She had dressed as a man to take her father's place in the war against the Huns.

Hoping to help her fit in, Mushu advised Mulan to, "Walk like a man. Legs apart," and "Punch guys in the arm. Call them names and spit a lot."

Every time Mushu gave her advice, Mulan caused more trouble in the army camp and when Captain Shang arrived it was in chaos.

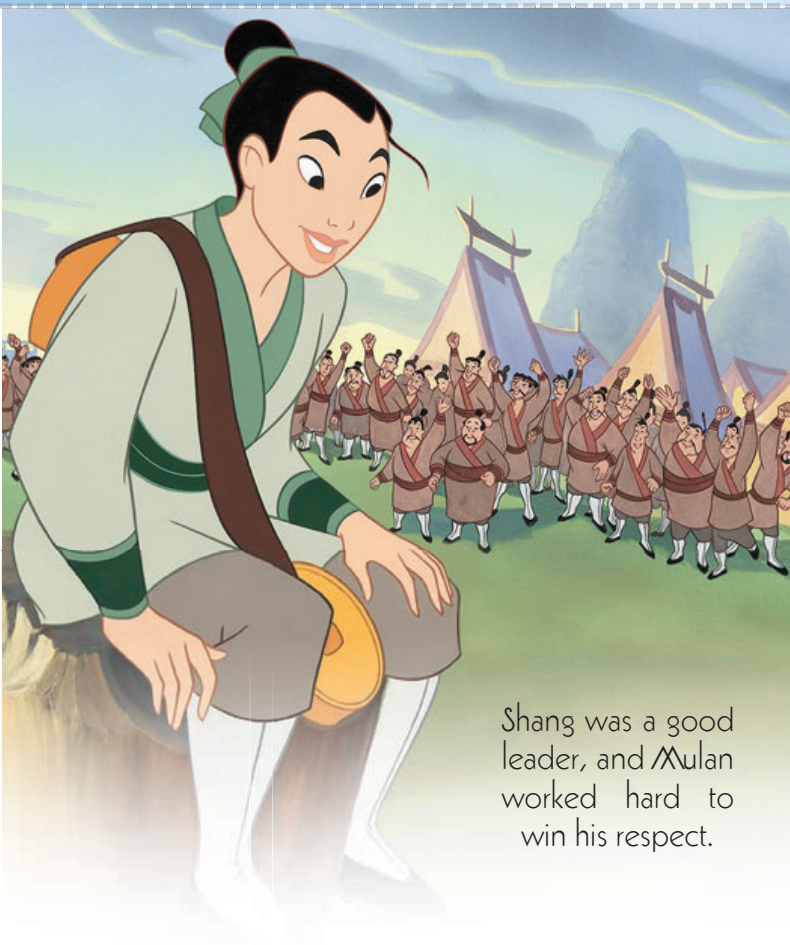

As for Mushu, the little dragon got back his guardianship. "Send out for eggrolls!" he shouted to the happy ancestors.

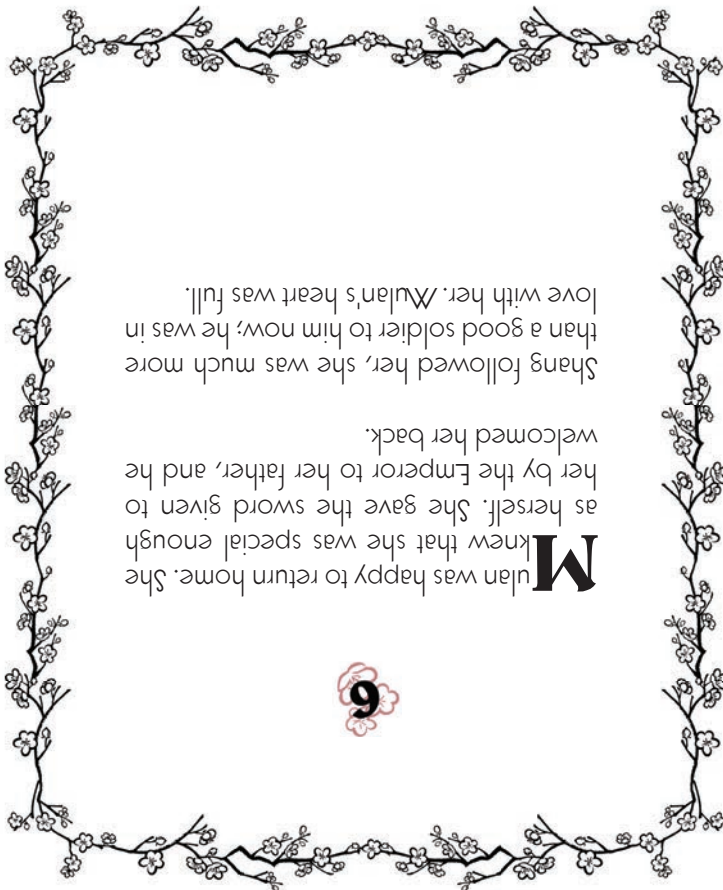

"My name is...uh...Ping," Mulan told Shang, trying to sound like a man. Shang did not like troublemakers.

Shang was a good leader, and Mulan worked hard to win his respect.

Mulan was happy to return home. She knew that she was special enough to as herself. She gave the sword given to her by the Emperor to her father, and he welcomed her back. Shang followed her, she was much more than a good soldier to him now; he was in love with her. Mulan's heart was full.

All of the soldiers liked Ping and were inspired by her actions.
But not even her best friends, Chien-Po, Ling and Yao, knew that "Ping" was a woman.

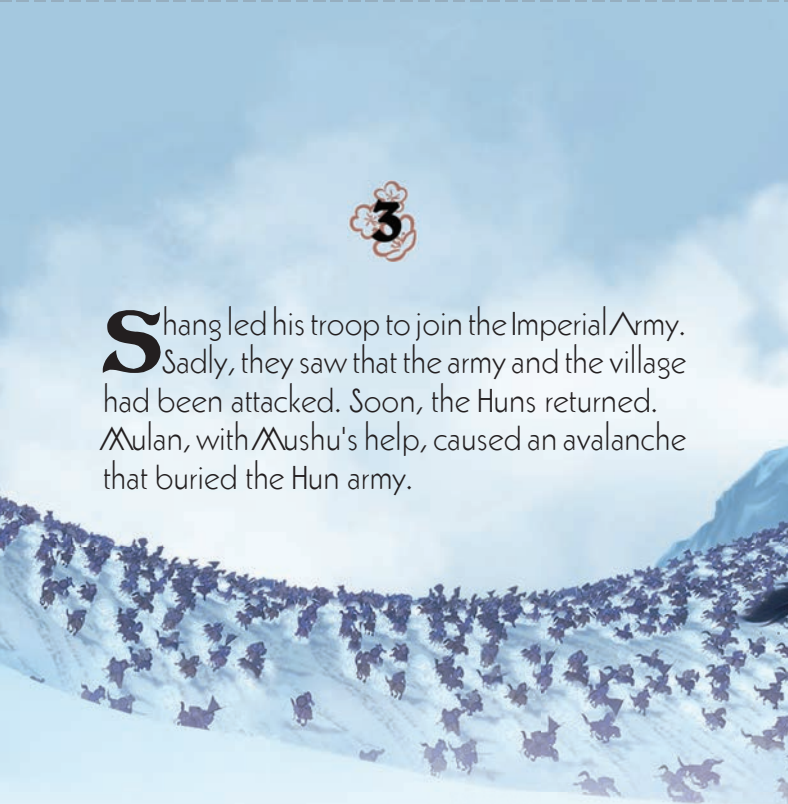

Shan Yu was blasted into a tower of fireworks!

Shang led his troop to join the Imperial Army. Sadly, they saw that the army and the village had been attacked. Soon, the Huns returned. Mulan, with Mushu's help, caused an avalanche that buried the Hun army.

Wounded in battle, Mulan was still able to climb on her horse and pull Shang from the snow.

As Shang thanked Mulan with admiration, he said, "From now on you have my trust."

They rescued the emperor, but Shan Yu, the Hun leader, attacked Shang. To protect him, Mulan and Mushu hatched a plan. They lead Shan Yu to the top of the palace and Mushu shot a rocket toward him.

Chien-Po, Ling, and Yao couldn't break down the palace door.

"I have an idea!" Mulan called.

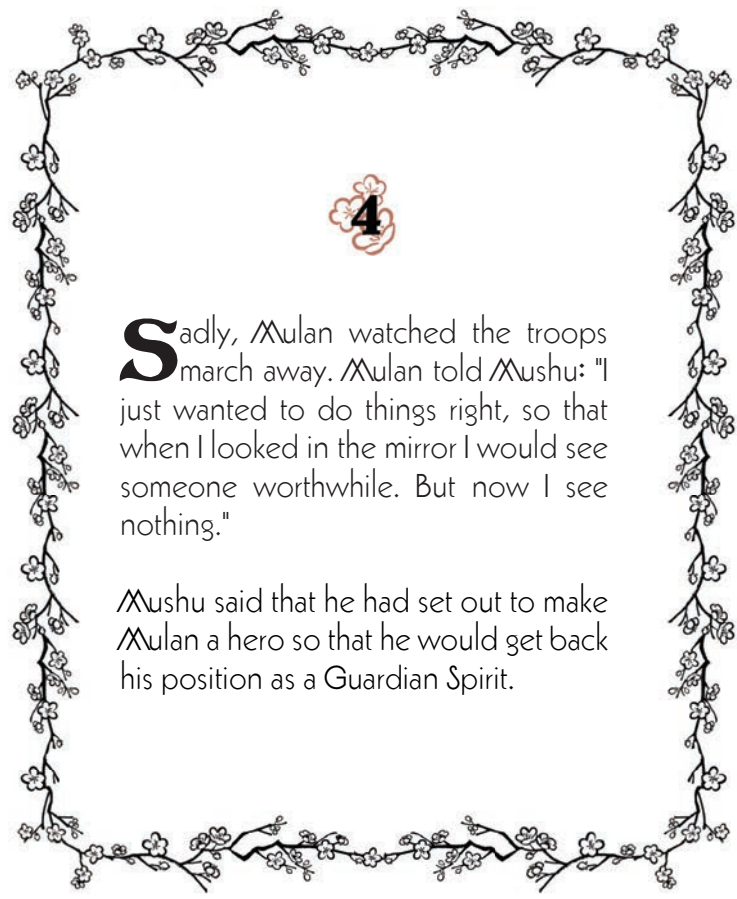

They let Mulan dress them as a women and were able to get close enough to attack the Huns. Shang soon followed them.

Mulan's smile soon disappeared, as her wound was treated, everyone learned the truth, that "Ping" was really a woman, Mulan, in disguise.

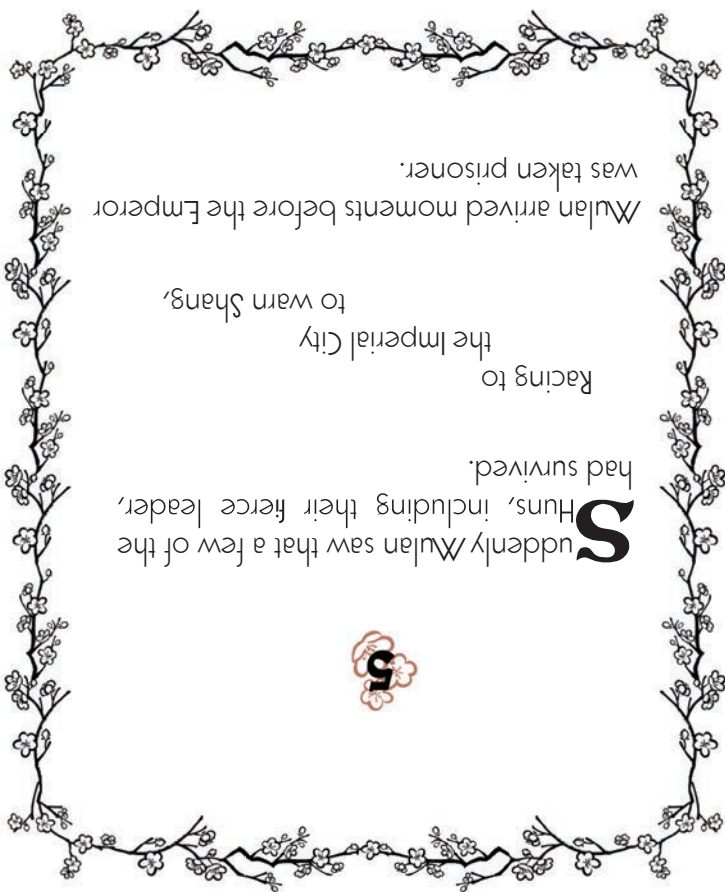

At this time in China, the punishment for Mulan's action was death, but Shang spared her. "A life for a life," he said.

Sadly, Mulan watched the troops march away. Mulan told Mushu: "I just wanted to do things right, so that when I looked in the mirror I would see someone worthwhile. But now I see nothing."

Mushu said that he had set out to make Mulan a hero so that he would get back his position as a Guardian Spirit.

Suddenly Mulan saw that a few of the Huns, including their fierce leader, had survived.

Racing to the Imperial City to warn Shang,

Mulan arrived moments before the Emperor was taken prisoner.
